Overview: New DCFS Report on Child Protective Services

This Child Protective Services Report is the first of a series of reports replacing the monthly Executive Statistical Summary of child welfare cases, which was published through July 2017. Accompanying this is the Call and Intake Volume Report, posted separately.

DCFS has streamlined internal production of this report and has expanded and updated the data categories.

Data is now shown for every region of the state, not just “Cook” and “Downstate.”

The Call and Intake Volume Report now includes all categories of calls. (The total does not add to total call volume there may be multiple calls regarding the same report.) It is now a standalone report, because the data is from a separate system.

The Child Protective Services Report also includes data on Human Trafficking cases for the first time.

The count of sexual abuse cases now includes Allegation 22, “Risk of Sexual Abuse,” which is not actual abuse but includes factors like child pornography, the presence of a sex offender in the household, and sexualized behaviors.

There is also a slightly expanded definition of the category “Death and Serious Harm Allegations,” which replaces the outdated term “Priority 1 Allegations.” The specific allegation categories included are listed at the end of the report.

We also are adding a section to the Subsequent Oral Reports to show the number and percentage of those reports that have “Indicated” findings. The term “indicated” means that the investigation produced sufficient evidence to substantiate the allegation made to the hotline.

As before, the reports go back five years in addition to the current fiscal year. The current year is “year to date” cumulative data, which is updated each month. The changes in definitions carry back to prior years, so comparisons are consistent over time. There are minor differences in some data compared with that in previous reports. Validation of data is ongoing to ensure precision, but this report is produced directly from the source data, in contrast with the substantial manual copying of data for the previous Executive Summary.

One category needs some detailed description, because the methodology underlying the data changed during fiscal 2018, but data for past periods does not match the new methodology.

In that category, “Subsequent Oral Reports,” the data shows a substantial increase. That is mostly a result of a change in how we track cases about a family. The change is a very important step in protecting children, but it distorts the current-year data.

When a family is first reported to DCFS, a case is opened with a sequential number starting with “A.” If an investigation is “indicated” – meaning an investigator finds enough evidence to substantiate abuse or neglect – a subsequent case will receive a number starting with “B.” If that “B” case is substantiated, the next subsequent case will receive a “C” number, and so forth. When an investigator opens a new case for that family, a letter other than “A” provides a clear sign that this family has history with DCFS. It’s a quick and important signal for the investigator.

Some investigations are “unfounded,” meaning an investigator did not find enough evidence to substantiate abuse or neglect. In the past, such a finding meant that the sequential numbering system did not move forward. So a family’s first unfounded “A” case could be followed by a second “A” case, and perhaps a third. An investigator opening a new case had no quick way of knowing the family has a history with DCFS. While the past “unfounded” case is not evidence in a new case, that history is critical information for an investigator. It is sign of continuing problems in a family.

So we changed the way we number reports. Now, every new case associated with the same family moves the lettering sequence forward, even unfounded ones.

How does that affect the data? The data report counts “subsequent oral reports” by counting new cases with a sequence letter other than “A.” Now, suddenly, there are a lot more of those because of the new numbering. Because old numbers do not change, cases in past years are counted under the old numbering method.

That’s why the subsequent report totals increase – because we started counting subsequent reports the right way.

Additional sections of the old Executive Statistical Summary are planned for release in the next few weeks as new programming is completed. These are: DCFS Protective Services, DCFS Child and Family Caseloads, DCFS Child Living Arrangements and Resources, and DCFS Licensing.

Reports will be updated each month at the “Reports and Statistics” page of the DCFS public website. The link is under the “About Us” navigation tab, or as a direct link to the page.
